Caughlin Creek Irrigation System

One of the unique features of Caughlin Creek is its shared irrigation system. The homes in Caughlin Creek are connected to a common irrigation network that was designed as part of the original development of the neighborhood.

Rather than each home having its own completely independent irrigation-water supply, the homes are tied into the neighborhood's shared irrigation system. The system distributes irrigation water throughout Caughlin Creek, with each home having its own sprinkler system and individual watering zones.

In simple terms, the water supply is shared, while the sprinkler systems at each home are individually controlled.

This was intentionally designed as a neighborhood-wide system and is part of the larger Caughlin Ranch irrigation infrastructure. Caughlin Ranch maintains and operates community irrigation facilities and provides 24-hour assistance for irrigation problems.

For a buyer, the important thing to understand is that the irrigation system is an established community system—not a separate irrigation well or system that each homeowner must independently provide and maintain. The homeowner controls the watering of their own landscaping, while the shared infrastructure provides irrigation water to the homes throughout Caughlin Creek.
